PREFACE.

In the year 1815, a Directory for the city of Pittsburgh, was published by one of the editors of the present work; being the first work of the kind that had been attempted in this place. The citizens of Pittsburgh, however, not being at that time, sufficiently aware of the usefulness of such a work, seemed indisposed to render the patronage the attempt merited and required. The consequence was a considerable loss to the editor; by reason of which his intention of making the work periodical, was abandoned.

Since that time, the inhabitants of this city have suffered much inconvenience and loss of time, from the want of an occasional reference to a Directory, as frequent migrations to and from the city, and the numerous removals which annually occur, render it impossible to remember the residence of all those, whom business or idleness, may lead us to seek. To the visitor, such a book is particularly valuable, as, by a glance, he may discover the dwellings of those with whom his business may lay, without the trouble of particular inquiries, and without subjecting himself to the tormenting queries of inquisitiveness.

To say nothing, therefore, of much other matter, contained in the book, which may prove valuable to men of business, the prompt direction given therein, to every house in the city and vicinity, must it is presumed, be a sufficient apology for again obtruding it upon the public.

The present editors have been encouraged to this undertaking, by many of their friends; they are sorry to say, however, that their subscription list does not answer their expectations. They have determined, nevertheless to persevere; less with the hope of reaping pecuniary benefit from the publication, than to screen themselves from actual loss.

Want of patronage compells the editors to compress the work, into a size that will be as little expensive as possible; they trust however, that their friends will not be dissatisfied, for though it is far short of what they intended, it yet fully equals their promises, as contained in their proposals.

DIRECTIONS TO THE READER.

The reader will please to observe, that as the houses in Pittsburgh are not numbered; the editors have been unable to give a more particular direction, than to the North, South, &c. side of the street, in which each person resides, this they have done by the initials, N. S. E. W.

As the pronunciation of a name will often admit of various modes of spelling it, the reader is requested not to relinquish his search, should he not find it at the first attempt; but to seek for it under every possible variety the ear may dictate.

Names omitted in the body of the work, as also removals, which have occurred since the work went to press, appear after the general list of names.

INTRODUCTION.

VIEW OF PITTSBURGH.

THE traveller who has glanced his eye over a map in search of this city, or who has formed an idea of its beauty from the accounts he has heard of its wealth and importance, is not a little disappointed when he enters it. The streets are narrow and the houses crowded together without uniformity. No splendid edifice rears its head to designate the dwelling of opulence, or to prove the existence of taste; and no public monument catches the eye of curiosity. Every object wears a black and sombre appearance. The concourse of waggons and drays that throng the streets, the clattering of hammers, the sounds of industry on every side, the cloud of smoke that pervades the air, and the busy faces of the inhabitants give it the appearance of a vast workshop. It is only upon a more intimate acquaintance, that its commercial importance is discovered, and the beauties and advantages by which it is surrounded known and acknowledged.

It had been intended to prefix to the Directory, a brief notice of this city, embracing its geographical and topographical importance, and an account of its wealth, population and manufactures; a series of pieces however, which lately appeared under the editorial head of the Pittsburgh Gazette, so fully answer this purpose, and so well deserve to be embodied, in a more durable shape, than that of a newspaper, that it is hoped, their insertion will not be disagreeable to our subscribers.

Pittsburgh is situated in 40 deg 35 min. North latitude, and 80. 35. West long. from London, or about 5 degrees West of Philadelphia, at the point where the Ohio River is formed by the confluence of the Allegheny and Monongahela. The Allegheny rises in the state of New York, and passes through a country which as yet is but thinly populated. The stream is clear and rapid, unobstructed by rocks, or by any considerable rapids, and may be navigated during the greater part of the year by large boats, from Pittsburgh to Olean, a distance of 150 miles by the road, and 300 by water.—The name of Allegheny seems to have been derived from Alleghewink, or the country of the Alleghewes, a tribe of Indians who are said to have formerly inhabited this part of Pennsylvania.

Monongahela, in the Indian tongue, means the River with the falling-in-banks. This is a sluggish stream. It is broad in comparison with the quantity of water it supplies, measuring about 530 yards at its mouth, and for a considerable distance above it; and though it presents numerous ripples, the channel is in general deep. Its water is not clear.

The junction of these streams forms the Ohio, or bloody river. This was called by the French, la belle riviere, a name which it in every respect deserves. Through its whole course, which extends to a distance of 873 miles, there is but little obstruction to its navigation, except at Louisville; and the falls at that place, may easily be avoided by means of a canal, whenever it is discovered that the interest of the country demands the execution of such a project.

There are no islands in the Monongahela, near its mouth; but in the Allegheny there are several, some of them large and valuable. At the head of the Ohio, about 500 yards from Pittsburgh point, and near the northern shore, there is an island, about 70 yards broad and 500 long. It is now called Smoky Island. During the revolutionary war, it was inhabited by friendly Indians. They built wigwams there, raised corn, and caught fish. After they left it, it was suffered to lie waste for several years. About 15 or 20 years ago it was cleared, fenced, and cultivated; but the great freshet in 1810, compelled its inhabitants to abandon their improvements. This island was formerly known by the name of Killbuck's Island, and was granted to Henry Killbuck, an Indian chief in reward for his services during the revolutionary war.

About two miles below, is a beautiful island containing 4 or 500 acres; formerly the property and residence of Doctor Branot, now of this city. At present it belongs to Mr. James Adams.

Nearly opposite the lower point of this island and on the south shore of the Ohio, is a remarkable promontory, called M'Kee's rocks. It is about eighty feet high, steep on each side, and almost perpendicular at the eastern extremity. The summit is level, and from a narrow point upon which stands an Indian mound, it becomes gradually broader as you proceed westward, until at last it descends to the river flats. About 200 yards west of the mound may be clearly traced the remains of an antique ditch and breast work, which passing nearly at right angles across the level summit of the hill, encloses a complete fort. The mound was examined by a party of gentlemen from Pittsburgh, and pieces of human bones were found in it, together with the bones of deer, and of other animals. Some charcoal was also found, and a large bead of a species of porcelain.

About five miles below Pittsburgh, lies Montour's Island, which is seven miles long and from three quarters, to a mile and a half broad. This island is exceedingly fertile, and capable of the highest improvement. It is the property and residence of Major Craig and others.

Opposite this island, on the north side of the Ohio, is a high perpendicular precipice on the face of the smooth rocks, of which there are several figures, drawn or painted with some substance resembling red iron ore, usually called keel. They are supposed to have been done by Indians, as they were observed by some of the earliest settlers of this country. The shallow recess of the rock upon which they appear, could only have been reached by ladders and ropes, let down from the top of the precipice, or, some suppose, by a portion of the hill, which has since fallen into the Ohio. Many persons have visited the place, and have made attempts to reach the painted rocks, but no one has been able to approach near enough to make a satisfactory examination.

The country around Pittsburgh is generally hilly, and to this circumstance it owes some of the great sources of its consequence and wealth. The coal-mines, which have occasioned this place to be celebrated for manufactures and for dirt, generally lie near the summits of the highest hills—that is about 340 feet above the level of low water in the rivers. Along the Conaquesnessing, about from twenty to thirty miles north of Pittsburgh, the coal beds* lie near the common level of the stream, but they are seldom more than two or three feet thick, and the coal in them is inferior to that in this neighbourhood. Southward and eastward of this, at the distance of twenty or thirty miles, the coal likewise lies near the surface of the low flats, but there it is equal to the Pittsburgh coal.

The ground upon which Pittsburgh is built is nearly level, and about forty feet (on an average) higher than the surface of the rivers at low water. The soil is alluvion, and evidently of very recent formation; and causes, similar to those which produced it, were for several years operating its destruction. Besides the table land, which constitutes the principal part of the city, there were, in the year 1780, two parallel flats upon the Allegheny shore, each about three hundred yards broad, extending half a mile from the Pittsburgh Point. The lowest of these, that is, the one next to the river, has been since entirely washed away, together with a considerable portion of the second. At the same time (1780) there stood near the shore of the outer flat a row of handsome buildings, which were erected for the reception of the Indian traders. One portion of the row had been demolished, as it was supposed to stand in an inconvenient position with regard to the Fort, and the other part was presently precipitated into the Allegheny.

Pittsburgh has four unequal sides, but it is very nearly a regular right angle triangle, the side bordering on the Allegheny being the hypotenuse or longest, and the line from one river to the other on the east side of the city, the shortest of the three. The longest side is nearly a mile and the shortest nearly three quarters of a mile. Monongahela, at this place, runs within a few degrees of west, and the Allegheny runs nearly south-west. The principal streets of the city join the Monongahela at right angles, and these are intersected nearly at right angles by others running parallel to the Monongahela. On the north, or rather north-west side of these, are two ranges of squares parallel to the Allegheny, which of course, join the other streets and squares at irregular angles. There are in all twenty two streets and twelve alleys.

Near the north-eastern limit of the city, and upon the shore of the

* It was formerly received as a geological fact, that there was but one stratum of Stone Coal running through our country, on the same level, and of equal thickness, say about six feet. This, however, is found to be untrue: Thirty miles from Pittsburgh, on Big Beaver, three strata have been discovered, one above the other at intervals 100 feet apart. The strata are thin and the coal of an inferior quality when compared with that of Pittsburgh—being much mingled with slate. These strata can never be of much importance, as they cannot be worked without uncovering the whole body, as is done at some places at the Black Heath coal mines near Richmond.

Allegheny, is situated the little town called the "Northern Liberty," or more frequently "Hayard's town."

On the north side of the Allegheny, about five hundred yards from its shore, and directly opposite the centre of Pittsburgh, is the town of Allegheny. On the public ground belonging to this town, the penitentiary for western Pennsylvania has been located, and is in considerable forwardness. This place will presently be connected with Pittsburgh by the bridge now erecting over the Allegheny.

On the south shore of the Monongahela, about a mile and a half from the mouth of the river, is the town of Birmingham. This town, which was only cleared out of the woods five or six years since, at present contains 50 or 60 houses, many of them handsome brick buildings, and is rapidly improving.

Upon the shore of the Allegheny about two and a half miles from the city, is the town of Lawrenceville, near the Pennsylvania turnpike, and connected with the garrison, United States' arsenal, &c. lately erected here.

Pittsburgh's natural expansion eastwardly is greatly checked by two hills, beautiful of themselves, but too steep to be converted into building lots. The southmost of these is marked Ayers on our maps, but is usually called Boyd's hill, because a person of that name committed suicide in the little grove upon the summit of it. The south side of this hill is precipitous and uncultivated, affording only a narrow way betwixt its base and the Monongahela. On the north side it is cultivated as an orchard. It is about 120 feet high, and the top of it broad and nearly level.

Grant's hill is partly surrounded by the city. It is about 60 feet high, rather regular, and not steep except on the western side. A great part of it is suffered to remain in a state of lawn; and if it were found in any other kind of scene it would be a charming spot—it would be highly romantic on the shore of a lake, or bordered by an ancient wood, or crowned with a ruin or mouldering cottages. This interesting little hill, which would have been a fairy rendezvous in the olden time, was named after colonel Grant, a Scottish officer, who was defeated here and taken prisoner. This event happened in 1758, when the French occupied a small fort which stood just at the confluence of the two rivers. It was called Fort Duquesne, and appears to have been erected about four years previous to Grant's defeat. At the period above mentioned, general Forbes was sent by the British government to capture and occupy it. He suffered colonel Grant to go in advance with eight hundred Highland troops. At sunrise the colonel halted on Grant's hill, and beat a reveille to the fort. The French and Indians sallied out unseen by him, surrounded him and cut his troops to pieces. When General Forbes arrived, he found the fort evacuated.

The United States afterwards purchased some lots near the north-eastern angle of the city, and erected a garrison. In 1813, this was sold out at auction, and the station at Lawrenceville was purchased. At the latter place some noble buildings of a most substantial style of architecture have been erected by Major Woolly, United States agent at this place

Along the shore of the Allegheny, in several lots, there now remain old apple trees, which were brought over the mountains at a great expense by a British officer, and planted here while the British government occupied Fort Du Quesne but scarcely any buildings of that period remain.

It is probable that Pittsburgh was once an Indian village or town, as the early settlers of this country used to notice to the eastward of Grant's Hill some traces of cultivation, that seemed to belong to a remote era, and in some degree to indicate the Indian method of raising corn.

In May 1784, the town on its present plan was surveyed by Col. George Woods. In 1785 or '86, there were about one hundred houses, extending nearly half a mile in a row along the Monongahela, that has since taken the name of Water Street, and of the houses, which were generally hewed-log cabins, some few still remain.

In 1810, there were 767 houses, stables and kitchens excepted, to wit: stone 11—brick 283—frame and log 473. The number of inhabitants amounted to 4,740, and the total inhabitants of the county to 25,317.

In 1811, there were 952 houses.—Inhabitants about 6000.

In 1815, houses 1303.—Inhabitants about 8000

At present, there are about 9000 inhabitants, and the number of houses has increased proportionably.

This station, when it bore the name of Fort Du Quesne, and remained in the hands of the French, was one of that line of fortified posts which connected their possessions in Canada and Louisiana. In 1753, they began to occupy this portion of country, when it was considered as included within the limits of Virginia. It was the intention of the French to have confined the British to the tract of country east of the Allegheny mountains, and it was in pursuance of this view that Fort Du Quesne and the other "Ohio Posts" were established. Measures were taken to resist this claim by Mr. Dinwiddie, who was at that time Governor of Virginia. In the first instance, he despatched Major George Washington (since General Washington) with a letter to Mons Le Gardcur de St. Pierre, commandant on the Ohio, remonstrating against the pretensions of the French.

Washington was then just twenty one years of age. When he received his instructions he set out on the 15th Nov 1753. From Mills Creek, which was then the extreme point of the Virginia Western frontier, (since called Fort Cumberland) he passed in a very inclement winter through a dangerous wilderness. His party finding the road impracticable on horseback, had to continue their route on foot carrying their guns and knapsacks on their backs. Arriving at the Monongahela near its head waters, they proceeded down it to the head of the Ohio, and thence they ascended the Allegheny to to the post called Le Beuf upon French Creek, and there Major Washington delivered to St. Pierre the letter of Governor Dinwiddie. He took St. Pierre's answer, and returned with it by the same route, and delivered it to the Governor at Williamsburgh, executing the business of his commission within the period of seventy eight days from the time of his appointment. The scope of our subject does not admit of our noticing the policy of his conduct towards the Indians as he passed them. But from his journal of the tour we extract the following remarks relative to this place.

"The excessive rains and vast quantity of snow which had fallen, prevented our reaching Mr. Frazier's, an Indian trader, at the mouth of Turtle Creek, on the Monongahela river, till Thursday the 22d. We were informed here that expresses had been sent a few days before to the traders down the river, to acquaint them with the French General's death, and the return of the major part of the French army into winter quarters.

"The waters were quite impassable without swimming our horses, which obliged us to get the loan of a canoe from Frazier, and to send Barnaby Currin and Henry Steward down the Monongahela with our baggage to meet us at the forks of the Ohio, about ten miles, there to cross the Allegheny.

"As I got down before the canoe, I spent some time in viewing the river, and the land in the fork, which I think extremely well suited for a fort, as it has the absolute command of both rivers. The land at the point is twenty or twenty-five feet above the common surface of the water; and a considerable bottom of flat well timbered land all around it, very convenient for building. The rivers are each a quarter of a mile or more across, and run here very near at right angles: Allegheny bearing northeast, and Monongahela south east. The former of these two is very rapid and swift running water; the other deep and still without any perceptible fall.

"About two miles from this, on the southeast side of the river, at the place where the Ohio Company intended to erect a fort, lives Shingiss, king of the Delawares."

The place which Washington here refers to is probably the Indian fortification at M'Kee's rocks, which we before noticed.

Whatever was the answer of Le Gardeur de St. Pierre, to Governor Dinwiddie, it was such, as induced the Virginia Legislature to raise a regiment of three hundred men to maintain the British claims to this portion of the province. Mr. Fry was appointed colonel of the detachment, and George Washington lieutenant colonel. In April, 1754, Col. Washington advanced with two companies of the Virginia regiment to a place called the Great Meadows. Though war had not yet been declared between France and Britain, he undertook to commence hostilities. In a dark rainy night he surprised the French troops in their encampment at the Great Meadows and killed the commander Jumonville, who has since been so well commemorated by the poet of his own country. All the rest of the party immediately surrendered, except one man that made his escape. Presently after, Col. Fry died, and the command of the regiment devolved upon Washington. He was besides reinforced by two independent companies of regulars—one from

New-York, and the other from South Carolina. At this period commenced the erection of Fort Du Quesne, under Mons. de Villier.

Washington, finding himself at the head of four hundred men set out to attack the French troops stationed here; but he had not proceeded more than thirteen miles, until he received information from a party of friendly Indians that this post had recently been strongly reinforced. He then held a council of war which unanimously determined upon a retreat. This was effected as far as the Great Meadows, where some fortifications were immediately constructed, and the fort was called Fort Necessity. Before the works were finished they were attacked by a considerable body of French troops under the command of D. Villier. The Americans defended themselves most heroically, some fighting within the stockade, and others in the surrounding ditch. Washington managed the operations with the greatest firmness and coolness, remaining on the outside of the fort during the whole day. The engagement began at ten o'clock in the morning, and lasted until night, at which time De Villier offered terms of capitulation to the Americans. Washington rejected the first and second set of proposals that were sent, but finally, in the course of the night, agreed to the following.

"The fort to be surrendered on condition that the garrison should march out with the honours of war; and be permitted to retain their arms and baggage, and to march unmolested into the inhabited parts of Virginia."

The list of killed and wounded would seem to have been blank, at least we have no account of it. Washington, together with the officers and troops under his command, received at their return the thanks of the Virginia Legislature, and thus ended the first expedition against Fort Du Quesne.

Great Britain presently entered with considerable interest into the contest: General Braddock was immediately despatched with two regiments to capture the fort and dispossess the French of what was then called the "Ohio Country." Early in the next year (1755) he arrived in America, and being informed of Washington's merit and knowledge of the country, he invited him to join the expedition in character of a volunteer aid-de-camp: The invitation was accepted. Washington accordingly joined him at Alexandria, and proceeded with him by the way of Will's Creek. From that point the army found great difficulties in their progress, and eventually determined to leave their heavy artillery and baggage behind, for the purpose of reaching this place by a rapid movement. Col. Dunbar remained with the baggage, and the general with the select troops proceeded through the Little Meadows, and crossed the Monongahela. On the 9th of July, they again crossed it below the mouth of Turtle Creek, and before they had marched a mile on this side of the river they were attacked by a large body of French and Indians, some of whom were concealed amidst weeds and brush, some in the narrow-little valley of a rivulet, and the remainder behind trees. The place where the battle was fought was about ten miles from Fort Du Quesne, and half a mile from the shore of the Monongahela. Immediately upon the first onset the van of the British force fell back upon the main-body, and the whole army was thrown into disorder. The Indian marksmen picked out and dispatched most of the officers. In a short time Washington was the only unwounded aid de-camp in the British army. During the carnage and confusion of that day, two horses were shot under him and four bullets pierced his coat. General Braddock displayed much firmness and valour, but in other respects he fought the battle most imprudently particularly in compelling his men to expose themselves to the destructive fire of a concealed enemy, instead of permitting them to dislodge the foe, or else shelter themselves behind the trees. This was the more inexcusable, as he had been cautioned in regard to the danger, and advised to send the Virginia troops forward to scour the woods—an advice which he rejected with contempt. The battle lasted about three hours, and in the course of it the general had three horses shot under him. Finally he received a mortal wound, of which he died in a very few days at Camp Dunbar.

When Braddock fell, the British troops gave way on every side, and could not be rallied. They recrossed the river, and Washington conducted the retreat with consummate prudence, preserving the troops thereby from the carnage which was apprehended on the occasion. The Indians contented themselves with plundering the camp and made no regular pursuit.

In the British army there were eighty-five British officers, and of that number sixty-four were found upon the list of killed and wounded. The Virginians behaved bravely and did much execution, but suffered a loss comparatively trifling.

The army fell back upon Camp Dunbar, which they destroyed, together with as much of their baggage as they could spare, and thence they retreated to Philadelphia: thus ended the second expedition against Fort Du Quesne.

During the three succeeding years (1756-7-8) the savages crossed the mountains and committed great depredations upon the old frontier—driving the Pennsylvanians as far back as Carlisle, the Marylanders as far as Fredericktown, and the Virginians as far as the Blue Ridge. Many skirmishes took place, but nothing producing any result of importance. However, the sufferings of the frontier colonists became intolerable. Some collected into little fortified posts, and were compelled by famine to abandon them. Sometimes those block houses were surrounded and taken, and the people in them butchered or put to the torture, or else carried into captivity.—Through the influence and exertions of Washington and other leading men, after great difficulty, vigorous measures of resistance were adopted; and the defence of the middle and southern colonies was committed to general Forbes. The great object was the reduction of Fort Du Quesne, and the troops destined for that purpose, were some at Philadelphia, some at Ray's Town, and the rest dispersed along the frontiers of Virginia. The command of the latter portion was given to Washington, but great delay took place in collecting them at W

Chester their place of rendezvous, and the whole of the troops did not arrive there until the 21st of September, (1758) though the first formation of the army had commenced early in the spring. On the 5th of November they had passed the most westerly range of the Appalachian mountains, and arrived at the Loyalhannah, (Fort Ligonier) about fifty-one miles from this place. In a council of war it was resolved that the army should remain at that station during the winter; but in consequence of some information obtained from prisoners taken in that neighborhood they determined to proceed. On the 23th of November they reached Fort Du Quesne and found it abandoned by the French, who had retreated down the river.

We have here passed over the incident of the capture of Col. Grant, and destruction of his party, because it was noticed in the topographical account of Pittsburgh, as the event to which the beautiful eminence on the east of the city owed its name.

The acquisition of Fort Du Quesne is mentioned by Ramsey and others as an event of the utmost importance to the middle colonies. The French were thereby entirely expelled from the Ohio country, and a great revolution seemed to have been caused in the disposition of the Indians.

The Fort, which had nearly been demolished by the French at their retreat, was considerably repaired, and garrisoned by two hundred men from Washington's regiment. At that period Brigadier Forbes changed its name to Fort Pitt, in honour of the late Earl of Chatham.

The building of the town commenced about the year 1760, and in the course of two years it had a population estimated at 200 souls. When the Indian war took place, in 1763, the inhabitants of the place were obliged to retire within the fort for several months, during which time it was closely besieged by the savages. Being destitute of the means of making regular approaches, the Indians took post on the banks of the adjacent rivers, and blockaded it so effectually that they cut it off from all communication without. Sir Jeffery Amherst, at that time commander in chief in America, sensible, from the situation of the place, that it would be a principal object of savage fury, had dispatched Lieut. Col. Bonquet with a large quantity of provisions and military stores, under a strong escort, consisting of part of the 60th Regt. part of the 42d Highlanders, and some provincial troops to the relief of the garrison. On the 5th August the detachment arrived at Fort Ligonier. In order to facilitate their march, the waggons and heavy baggage were left there, whilst the colonel proceeded with the troops and about 250 horses loaded with flour. The Indians having intelligence of their approach, abandoned the blockade of Fort Pitt to attack them on their march. On the night of the 10th of August, when Bonquet had advanced within twenty five miles of Pittsburgh, and while his troops were refreshing themselves after a fatiguing march, his advanced guard was suddenly attacked; but being speedily reinforced, the savages were repulsed, driven from their lurking places and pursued a considerable way. On the following morning they returned and attacked the camp under an incessant fire. It was in vain for the British to repel them, because when pressed, they retired but returned with redoubled ardour. The condition of the detachment was truly deplorable; galled by the fire of the Indians, faint and dispirited through a total want of water, and three-fourths of their camp surrounded. Thus situated, Captain Barret, who commanded a company of provincial riflemen, proposed to Col. Bouquet to lead out two companies privately, through a narrow defile, in the only quarter from which they were not assailed, and by a circuitous route fall upon the enemy behind. The plan was adopted and succeeded—the Indians receiving a heavy fire in rear, conceived it to be a reinforcement from Fort Pitt, and immediately fled. The loss which the English sustained was above one hundred killed and wounded; that of the Savages about the same. The detachment continued their march, and in four days after the engagement reached the fort, where they found Captain Ecuyer severely wounded and the garrison almost reduced to extremity.

In 1765, Pittsburgh was first laid out as a regular town. It was again laid out on a plan somewhat different by Colonel George Woods, who surveyed it in May, 1784, by order of Gench Francis, Esq. attorney for John Penn, Jr. and John Penn. That plan it still retains. The scite of it was a part of one of the manors of the Penn family, and the whole, including even the fort, was surveyed into lots and streets, and sold for the proprietors.

Pittsburgh contains no public buildings worth particular notice. The court house at present accommodates both the county and city courts, and serves for a variety of other purposes. The interior of it exhibits a great deal of incongruous architectural display, but the exterior is plain and heavy, excepting the frontispiece of the door, which is absurdly ornamental. In order to increase the effects of its magnitude, the public offices belonging to it were made low—so very little and low that they thereby defeat the builder's intent, and look like houses attached to the main building for conveniencies without having entered into the original design; apparently doomed through parsimony to forfeit all claim to a share of the grandeur which the whole was expected to display. The court house stands in the only public square which the city contains, and ranges with houses on the western side of Market street. The principal Market house occupies the chief part of the opposite or eastern half of the square. It is small and regular, though of an unique form, which cannot be described by any technical name, but nearly approaches the figure which in geometry is called a semi-cycloid. There are two other market houses in the eastern end of the city, but as they were erected for the purpose of ground speculation, they fell into gradual neglect and are now entirely disused.

There are now eleven houses of public worship in Pittsburgh. Ten of them are now occupied, to wit: Two by congregations of General Assembly Presbyterians—one of Scotch Seceders—One of Covenanters—one of the Associate Reformed—Two of Methodists—one of Baptists, one of Roman Catholics—and one of German Reformed.

The church now unoccupied belongs to a congregation of episcopalians. Several of these churches are spacious buildings, but they are destitute of every pretension to architectural elegance. The Episcopal church has a pretty little cupola, but like most architectural designs of modern adoption it is a mere copy. The first Presbyterian meeting house has a very fine chandelier of German workmanship, lately presented to it by General O'Hara, of this place, but its magnificence glares in unbecoming contrast to the Quakerlike plainness of the house. The Episcopal church and the chapel have each an organ—small but otherwise good instruments; and arrangements have lately been made for improving the vocal music of the principal Presbyterian congregation. It would be creditable to the place, if, in this age and country of liberty and good sense, religious liberality would allow good taste to make similar arrangements in some other of the congregations.

There are three banks here, the Branch of the United States Bank, the Bank of Pittsburgh, and the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank—but the buildings they occupy were originally intended for private dwelling houses. We omit here to notice the manufactories or private establishments of any kind, as we intend to take a general view of them at the close of this article.

There are no private houses that can claim particular attention; there are some good rows of buildings in Wood and Market streets, and a considerable number of single houses in other parts of the city, but many of the best parts of it are filled with wretched fabricka, and the mass of the city is no doubt such in this respect as to disappoint the expectations of the generality of travellers.

The structures of most consequence to us and most likely to attract the attention of others, are the two bridges now erecting over the Monongahela and Allegheny rivers. The former is nearly completed and is now opened for passengers. The abutments and the seven intermediate piers are of massive stone work, the former cut and the latter strongly vesticated. The rest of the bridge is made of wood and iron, and so constructed that any of the pieces may be replaced when they decay. The lower timbers of the bridge which form the flooring for carriages, &c. to pass upon, are elevated about 36 feet from the water at low water point. The arches rise above this flooring in what the builders term a catenarian curve. Upon the top of these arches the covering of the bridge is to rest. The flooring is suspended by iron inch square bars from the range of timbers that rest on the top of the arches. There are three ranges of arches, one in the centre and one on each side of the carriage ways, leaving a space of 12 feet for each of the ways. On both sides of the bridge are railed uncovered ways, each 4 ft. 3 in. wide for foot passengers. The arches consist of six ranges of timbers, each one — inches by — strongly bound together by iron bolts and screws, that may be removed for the purpose of replacing any that may happen to decay. The contract entered into for erecting this bridge amounted to $110,000.

The Allegheny bridge is to consist of seven arches to be constructed in the same manner. The northern abutment of this latter, is already raised, and is not of cut stone like those of the Monongahela bridge, but is vesticated like the piers. The cost of this bridge is estimated at 100,000 dolls.

About the year 1798, the inhabitants of this place became seriously alarmed at the encroachments of the Allegheny river, which had destroyed whole ranges of lots on the northern side of the town. In consequence of this a wharf was constructed near the northern angle of the town, about thirty feet in height, and extending from the bank about sixty or sixty-five feet into the river.— This at once changed all the current, and from that time it continued to wash away the opposite banks, until in the great freshet of 1813 the greater part of the wharf was itself carried off. Another smaller wharf was afterwards erected near the site of the old one, and a considerable part of the same shore extending eastwardly was protected by a long low wharf, erected by the late Gen. Woods, since which time the river appears to have produced little or no effect upon either of its banks.

Some wharfs have been erected along the Monongahela shore for the purpose of forming inclined ways, &c. and not for the preservation of the banks, for the ground of the city seems to have encroached upon the river at this side.

In January 1817, the following account of the manufactories, &c. carried on in this place and its vicinity was collected and reported by a committee of the city council.

These were supposed to employ 357 hands, and the amount produced by them to be 370,000 dollars, making a total of 1,637 hands, and an amount of 2,266,366 dollars.

During the year 1818, the following additional manufactories have been established in this place:

Rolling and Slitting mill.—An extensive establishment, belonging to the "Pittsburgh Steam Engine Company," William Robinson, jr. and Joshua Malen. At their Rolling mill, which has two engines, each 120 horse power, will be manufactured bar, rolled, and sheet Iron.

Type Foundry.—Mr. Lothian has commenced casting printing type—an establishment very important to the printers of the Western Country who can now be supplied with every variety of type at the Philadelphia prices, without the addition of carriage.

Paper Hangings.—Two extensive paper hanging manufactories are carried on with great success

Whip and Cane Manufactory.

Copperas.—Mr. J. Gibb manufactures allum, copperas, oil of vitrol, &c and meets with encouragement.

Besides the above, there are many of minor importance, which are too tedious to enumerate.

COMMUNICATED.

The Pittsburgh Manufacturing Association.

This Institution was commenced by a few of the actual manufactures of this city, who frequently met to consider what means should be adopted to revive the spirit of domestic manufacturing.

It was soon perceived there was no place of general deposit in the city, where the western merchants and others, might have an opportunity of viewing at once, the various articles fabricated within Pittsburgh and its vicinity.

In order to obviate this inconvenience, the association was formed,—books opened for stock which stock is paid in articles fabricated by the subscribers.

The mercantile concern of this establishment is conducted by nine directors, annually chosen.

by the association, whose duty it is to inspect the quality of the goods deposited, appoint clerks, &c. &c.

They have proceeded so far, as to open a warehouse, in Wood Street, between Front and Second streets, for the reception not only of the stock subscribed, but to receive domestic goods for sale.

This institution will at once, not only discover a specimen of the spirit and enterprise of our too long neglected manufactories, but will also exhibit the advancing improvements of the most useful class of our citizens, and we have no doubt will do honour to our city; nor is there a hesitation in concluding that this laudable undertaking will be patronized by the lovers of American Independence.

EPITOME OF THEIR CONSTITUTION.

“ Prompted by the benign influence of charity and benevolence, W E, whose names are herewithunto subjoined being natives of Ireland, citizens of Pennsylvania, do hereby agree to form ourselves into a society, for the purpose of raising a fund for the relief of distressed Irishmen, their widows and orphans, and do establish and adopt the following constitution for our regulation and government.

ARTICLE I. Name of the Association.

ARTICLE II. Appoints the stated times of meeting, which is quarterly.

ARTICLE III. Officers of the society and method of electing them: elections to be held annually, for President, Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer, and quarterly for the visiting committee.

ARTICLE IV. Designates the duties of the different officers, and that it is the particular duty of the visiting committee, to visit all distressed Irishmen, arriving, or residing in the city, and if they are worthy, to grant pecuniary relief, so far as may be in their power, and make report of their proceedings in detail, at each subsequent meeting of the society. This article also provides for calling extra meetings, when necessity requires it.

ARTICLE V. Describes the qualifications necessary for membership, and method of admitting members.

All applicants for admission must first send a petition in writing to the society, and be recommended by at least one or two members, which being read, a committee of three is appointed to examine into his character, should they report favourably, a ballot shall be taken, and if seven eighths of the members present vote in his favour, he may be admitted.

ARTICLE VI. Payments by the members.

Each member on signing the constitution, shall pay into the treasury five dollars, and four dollars per annum to be paid quarterly; a fine is also imposed for non-attendance at meetings, unless a reasonable excuse is given.

ARTICLE VII. Provides for the punishment of improper conduct in any member, by fine, or expulsion.

ARTICLE VIII. Shows the method of drawing money from the funds.

ARTICLE IX. Describes the insignia, or badge of the society, to be worn only at their anniversary meetings, and at funerals.

ARTICLE X. Provides for amendments to the constitution.

There is also a set of bye-laws; but as they are, for the most part, only intended to elucidate the constitution, it is unnecessary to give an abridgement of them.

This society was instituted in the year 1816. During the first and second year, on account of their members being but few, and consequently their funds very limited, they were not able to relieve all the wants of even the deserving applicants for their benevolence. But they now have the satisfaction to believe, from their rapid increase in numbers, and improved state of the funds, that they will be enabled to be of service to any Irishmen, their widows, or orphans, who may be worthy of their bounty; at the same time, they do not consider themselves bound to relieve any of the numerous class of those who bring on hasten distress on themselves, by their vices, and habitual idleness; on the contrary, they will do every thing in their power to discountenance such characters; nor need any such apply for relief, as the most careful and diligent inquiry will always be made, to prevent the funds of the society from being squandered, to support laziness, or vices of any description.

☞ Irishmen wishing to become members of this institution, can make application to any member, in the manner prescribed in Article V of the constitution.

EDWARD F. PRATT,

WOOD STREET,

PITTSBURGH.

In a work professedly given to the world for the benefit of its denizens, information of no kind ought to be omitted. It is under an impression of this kind, that the writer of the present expose comes forward, and for an instant abandons his usual occupation of embellishing the exterior, for the task of enlightening the interior of that portion of the human figure, anciently denominated the Caput, but in more modern times, the Head.

“When wild wars deadly blast was blown,
“And gentle peace returning:”

Or, in plain prose, when the revolutionary struggle was over, Washington retired to his plough, and Hamilton became a barrister; after a similar event, in later times, Dearborn became a public writer, Rush an ambassador, and Pratt resumed his razor.

Tam Marte quam Minerva.

As a great man has said the “sceptre of empire is travelling to the west,” we went with the tide, and established our headquarters in the goodly city of Pittsburgh, which under correction, we presume, has acquired some increase of reputation from our presence. Osiris introduced the arts into Egypt; Bacchus civilized India, and Manco Capac corrected the rudeness of the Peruvians. Deification was cheap in those days, because talents were scarce. A Pratt, in Egypt, would have been a Serapis; in Greece a Hermes, or in

Shaving.

Africa, where they worship the devil, his statue would have been distinguished by a pair of horns and a cloven foot. In modern times, however, a great man must be great indeed before he can expect to receive the universal homage of mankind. The military hero is admired, the lawyer is respected, and the physician sought after; but he only can become absolutely popular, and the real friend of man, whose whole time is devoted to increasing the comforts of his fellow creatures. 'Twas with these ideas, and after closely examining every possible avenue that led to fame, that our choice fell upon the noble profession of the Razor. On our arrival in the west, we found this mystic science in its infancy; and many of its ramifications entirely unknown. We resolved therefore that the blessings of our art should be diffused through the west, and that the improvements in shaving and hair-dressing, should go hand in hand with the progress of high steam and bank paper. What has been the glorious result of our operations, we leave to the gratitude of succeeding generations to say; modesty, that true characteristic of real greatness, prevents us from touching the subject.

The importance, however, of the great art, the interesting associations its recollection brings to the mind, ought to be generally known. Women have produced many and serious revolutions: Helen brought destruction on Troy; Lucretia and Virginia at different periods revolutionized the government of Rome; an easy French queen, who afterwards mounted the English throne, created most of the old wars between the two governments, that lasted for centuries; and the rape of an Irish princess, first induced an English army to cross St. George's channel, and riot on the plunder of the Emerald Isle. The history of the human beard is distinguished by circumstances not less remarkable. The Greeks wore their beards till the days of Alexander; the Romans began to cut theirs in the year of Rome 454, when a corps of artists arrived from Sicily. Anciently the beard ranged in all important ceremonies; thus in the treaty between Alaric and Clovis, Alaric touched the beard of Clovis to become his god father. The beard, and the absence of it, form one of the grand distinctions between the Greek and Roman churches; the latter show their devotion by shaving. the former obstinately preserve the hair of the chin. The Chinese affect beards excessively; but nature has generally denied them this gratification; the ancient Persian kings, according to St. Crysostom, had their beards wove together with golden thread; and the kings of France had a similar custom. The old Epic is nothing without them: Homer dwells upon the white beards of Nestor and Priam; Virgil describes that of Mezentius as covering his whole breast; Pliny and Plutarch both acknowledge its importance; and Persius calls Socrates Magistrum barbatus, or the bearded Master.

Several heroes have preferred the cognomen of bearded to that of great. The Emperor Constantine was distinguished by the appellation of pogonate, or bearded; in the time of the crusades there was a Geoffry the bearded; Baldwin 4th, earl of Flanders, was called the handsome beard. The Tartars from religious principles, waged a long and bloody war against the Persians, because they would not cut their beards in the Tartar style. A thousand facts, in short, might be adduced to prove the importance of that article, which

Shaving.

It has been for so many years the subject of our sublime speculations. A tremendous revolution at length took place on this important subject, when Lewis the XIII ascended the throne of France; all eyes were fixed on the Monarch's chin, when lo it was smooth! The Duke of Sully, who had a famous covering for his face, retired from court in disgust; the honorable order, of which we are now grand master, was created; beards disappeared, and whiskers became the order of the day. From that moment the solemn mysteries of our art commenced; they have continued increasing in importance until the present time, which under our administration may, without arrogance, be denominated the Augustan age of shaving. It is a melancholy fact that corruptions have crept into its mystic solemnities, by suffering unworthy characters to participate in the rites; but these evils we trust our presence has banished from the west! None can in future be admitted, "who are not well and duly prepared;" the infliction of torture on the human face is henceforth to cease; no more ghastly wounds are to disfigure the chin; and a Philadelphian will never again have it in his power to point to our palace, and exclaim,

"Ene illas Lachrymas!"

To consummate our great plan, and to fulfil the destinies of the Art, we think proper to enact the following decree, to which we shall exact the strictest obedience, under no less a penalty than the infliction of the three curses of our art, viz a dull razor, cold water, and stinking soap!

"Be it enacted and decreed, that in future no citizen, who may have the felicity to breathe the vital oxygen, within the influence of our beatific administration, shall presume to act the part of a "Hesautimorimenois" or self-tormenter, by attempting our mystic operations with his own sacrilegious hands; but that henceforth all who wish to be shaved, either for the glorious and praise worthy ambition of creating a beard, or for the comfortable purpose of getting rid of one, shall repair, at stated periods, to the antichamber of our "sanctum sanctorum," or to one of the branches of the mother institution, which we have established here and there, for the convenient, necessary, and essential purpose of carrying on the operations of government, where the slyphic hand of an adept is always ready to apply the mystic touch of the razor in such a manner that the chin will be instantly as smooth as the face of the Belvidere, without the subject suspecting that he had been under the hands of an operator at all. Let all obey!
